Good Ol' Leathery May Rest In Peace No More!

The Old Leatherman was a legendary figure who wandered these parts in solitary silence in the late 1800's. He was laid to rest in Sparta Cemetery in Ossining, New York in the winter of 1889. For over thirty years he travelled these roads and hills peacefully and privately in his home-made 60lb suit of leather. He was mostly treated with respect by the people of his time. Now, over 120 years later, a group of researchers has gotten permission to exhume his remains and conduct DNA testing on them. They are hoping that by extracting his "Wisdom Teeth" from his jaw, that they will finally be able to make him "talk". (so to speak)

We think this is just plain wrong
